Weekly update 34.

Manchester at Night! Always an interesting evening, better this time for the blue hour, with sunset around 2010. We then had at least an hour before it was fully dark. We were joined by six visitors, some had been with us before, but four were new, including a member of Bury PS. There were seven RDCC members, so a good group.

We worked our way round the Northern Quarter – a rich source of Unusual Things - & people! Alan then directed us towards St Peter's Square, where we all eventually ended up. As often is the case, we split into smaller groups, each going at a different pace.

Alan & I were accosted by two young ladies, one of whom asked us to take her picture, complaining that no one get a good one of her… Well that was easy. But I ended up talking to her friend, who is an artist, just at the beginning of her career. I suggested she meet Geoff Butterworth when in Rochdale. They both live on the north side of Manchester...

Above left, is a professional (?) photographer & and a model, with lights & flash. They noticed us… The building has been made to look like a giant fridge, with fridge magnets & post it notes. Above right, the girl who wanted a better photograph – my effort.

Next Tuesday, we are back at Syke. There will be an update on the next few weeks & months, a PowerPoint of some the pictures taken at the car show and some of yours taken during the summer. Full details next week. Don't forget to send your POTY 3 pictures via the Upload Link in good time before September 1st.
